

[DISC 1] ACT I*[1] Prelude*[2] Scene 1: A Sneeze

Backstage at Ford's Theater

EMERSON (studying his lines, rehearsing a sneeze)

Ah ahhh ahhhhh...

Aha!

And they call me Addlepate!

Who counts the lines missing in action
when a legend reclaims the stage?

My gathering sneeze will take the audience by storm and save my name.

[3] Arts of Theater

— Aria —

(pompously)

Are not the arts of theater like the arts of war?

Each company musters its troops and parades them in sabers and plumes to the music of fifes and clarions.
Their lines are drawn up and fired,
and others as hotly returned.
(reflects, warming to his theme)

Now, here's the mysterious part:

suppose a dramatic persona shoots,

do soldiers rush the stage and apprehend the villain?

Why no! It's just a play.

Well, so it is in war.

A brother runs his brother through,
and yet commits no murder.

The part he plays is part of one tremendous drama

directed from the wings.

(remembering that he's soon to go on)

Good Lord, what time is it?

(checks his pocket watch with some alarm, then summons up his courage)

Now's the time,

Ned Emerson,

prepare to act!

(resumes rehearsing his sneeze)

Ah ahhh ahhhhh... aah

BOOTH (approaching Emerson from behind, interrupts him)

Hear what that scoundrel did?

EMERSON (taken aback, offended, not yet recognizing Booth)

Scoundrel? Pardon?

I never forget a face,

BOOTH (*taking Emerson's cane, bending it

That low scoundrel Lincoln!

He sauntered through our smoldering

Richmond,

and marched his muddy boots

into the President's mansion.

He sits himself down in the "cheer,"

as he says it, of Jefferson Davis, and leaning back to tell a smutty joke, he squirts his tobacco juice over an heirloom carpet—

A vulgar man, a buffoon, a baboon liberator king

(shouting, cracks Emerson's cane)

of President Davis!

(regaining his composure, coolly)

Your cane, sir.

(hands cane to Emerson and strolls away)

EMERSON (in belated recognition)

Wilkes Booth!?

(aggrieved, exits with broken cane)

[4] Scene 2: Harry Hawk's Substitute

Backstage

HAWK (drinking but not drunk, reading from a letter)

"We regret to inform you..."

(reflecting)

"regret," that I am dead,

(reading)

"that your conscripted substitute, Mark Hazard, holding the rank of corporal at the time..."

"corporal," yes, still corporeal,

(reading)

but I remain to gather you up and carry you to my grave.

(reading)

"Having located no next of kin..."

I've been looking all week for you, Mark, in this dream.

It's night out and chilly

where I come to,

and overcast with stars.

— Aria —

I'm walking a corduroy road.

The moon is cut in two.

A whole blue field is falling, thickly and quietly,

like melting snow.

I can hear hogs snorting, fighting over something.

It smells of chloroform.

Here's where I find you, Mark,

so cold and chattering,

in a shallow rifle pit.

I dress you in boiled blue linen, fasten your cross-belt and tourniquet.

I dust off your forage cap,

your overcoat, and your knapsack

full of traps. But when I kneel to pull your knee boots on,

I find you've sent out roots.
Your uniform is hanging from a blasted possum oak.
The trunk is gouged and powder burned
and slick with sap.
Some limbs are yanked away.
Their sockets are bubbling.
But I can feel along
The air is still warm
and slender to the touch.
Higher up a bobolink sits burbling, pouring out its little jug of song.
My throat is sore.
I take a drink.
Now nothing else
will ever quench my thirst.
(He inspects his bottle, which is still empty.)

MATHEWS *(coming up without being noticed,

Hello, Harry. You're in good spirits.
What's that you're spiriting away?

HAWK (straightening his costume)
Some business of mine.

MATHEWS
Another part?

HAWK
I'm not playing, Jack. This is real.

MATHEWS
Real? Well, it can't be as real as all that.

HAWK
My substitute is dead,
It says here he died for me short of Petersburg.

MATHEWS
We're men of acting, Harry.
We act for others;
(Booth enters across the stage.)

MATHEWS (spots Booth)
But look, isn't that Wilkes Booth, disguised as a tragedian?

[6] Scene 3: Mathews and Booth

Backstage
smiling.)*

MATHEWS (extending his hand)
Wilkes! Still roaring? How's your throat?

BOOTH (shaking hands)
My voice is fine tonight.
Besides, my lines are few.

I have a letter for you.
Good Friday news that has not come to pass.
Will you deliver it?
I won't trust it to the Federal mail.

MATHEWS (takes the letter and reads from the envelope)
Marked Urgent.
Coyle? Are you joking?
(Mathews holds the letter out for Booth to take back, which he doesn't.)

BOOTH (changing the subject)
I understand your bumpkin emperor will attend the play tonight without his tipsy centurion.
I saw the Grants this afternoon
evacuating Washington, in terror,
I suspect, of Mary Lincoln's scenes.

MATHEWS (smiling)
Yes, she is theatrical,

BOOTH
Only a swoon is required.

MATHEWS (dropping his smile, shakes the letter at him)
Booth, what happens here?

BOOTH (departing without taking it)
Deliver the letter!
(Booth exits.)

MATHEWS *(looking after Booth, at the letter,

[7] What Happens Here?

— Aria —
What happens here?

Here where I live out my lives,
a villain clad in irony,
a snake that never leaves its lair or sheds its coat of mirrors.
Each night I spend a life, forging my schemes
among sultans and hasbeens, starlets and octoroons.
Hundreds of women
have eluded my clutches.
I have cursed my last curse hundreds of times.
I have hissed and been hissed
I have stolen and squandered
Now enters Booth,
Am I directed to conspire against our Caesar?
Will I be held responsible?
Is he mad enough to act?
Were his last reviews that bad?
What happens here,
where everything,
where nothing ever happens?
(He pockets the letter and exits.)

Scene 4

In the theater audience; some seated, some arriving engage in conversation.

A MAN (responding to a question)
No, just the President.

A SECOND MAN
Well, God bless U.S. Grant anyhow!

A WOMAN
The President? We see him everyday.

A SECOND WOMAN (pointing) That's Eleanor!
Three years of table rapping,

A THIRD WOMAN (to her woman friend)
The children won't go near him,
the way he eats. I won't neither.

Excuse me, are these your crutches?

THE VETERAN AMPUTEE
Wal, I'm agonter see Linkern and I'm agonter sleep, lessen they's music.

A SECOND VETERAN (indignantly)

A FREEDMAN
Father Abraham's gonna be right up there.
We'll see him, and he'll see us.

A BUSINESSMAN (putting his overcoat on seats)
Pardon me, are these seats reserved?

A WOMAN (handing him his overcoat)
First come, mister, first serve!

A NURSE (wiping herself)
Filthy pestilential streets!

[8] Chorus of Women
We met at the depot at dawn,
when they rang out name after name of the wounded, the missing, and dead—
Chestnutt and Evans and Green.
Sometimes at H, sometimes at M or Y a gasp or a groan would strike somebody in homespun or bombazine.
She'd sink out of sight, leaving a hole behind.
We'd drop down around where she lay,
but we never could reach her in time:
name—
sometimes at H, sometimes at M or Y.

[9] Chorus of Amputees
We laid down our arms, our kneecaps and rifle butts;
we emptied our barrel chests when that weren't enough.
The newspapers speak of a final disarmament.
How come, when we already laid down our arms?
We wagered our lives to crush the rebellion,
but we never intended to set no one free.
They tol' us to seize any runaway contraban', but how can you emancipate three-fifths of a man?
They's somethin' like me, three-fifths of a man.

[10] Chorus of Freedmen
We walked on over, walked on over, we walked
confiscated contraband can't walk on over by itself.

We laid down they hoes and children, we done
let their people go;
we abandoned Mississippi, we invaded Ohio.
You was fightin' with your black hand bound
You was fightin' without knowin' what idea to attack.
We picked up your Enfield rifle, we strapped on your haversack, Ever since we walked on over, three-fifths from one nothin' lacks.

[11] Chorus of Nurses
Rend your garments, ladies, but rend not your hearts.
When the wounded are hauled in, shattered and glazed,
clothes that the surgeons can rend their tattered members.
Bind up their remnants with blood-vessel silk, then bandage their wounds but guard against feeling and prophylac daily your heart if you care to survive. Rend all that you see from your minds,
dear ladies, rend everything saving your hearts.

[12] Chorus of Businessmen
The war was kind to us; we made a killing.
You'll light your oil lamps with kerosene.
We fortify our work with backs of green.
You'll drink from Mrs. Borden's powdered cow.

Please take our catalogue—it's so appealing.
But let's get back to work, the time is now.
There's money to be made. We know, we made a killing.

[13] Scene 5: Drinking Song
Backstage rehearsal

(Enter Emerson, Hawk, Mathews, and Booth, who observes from a distance.)

HAWK
Hey men!
Let's run through the wine-cellar scene.
Last night it went so badly
even the audience noticed.
Ned, know where we are?

EMERSON (thinking, then brightly)
Ford's Theater!

MATHEWS (laughs)
Tonight will be unforgettable!

HAWK (impatiently to Emerson)
The scene, Lord Dundreary, the scene!

EMERSON (frantically searching his script)
My mistake, fellow thespians.
Ahem! The wine-cellar scene,
Dundreary manor, somewheres deep in Southron Englan'.
(All quickly take their roles and places.)

HAWK (in role as Asa, addressing Emerson/Dundreary) Wal, Lord Dundreary,

this fix we're in needs fixin'!
I reckon by now Mary's got that legalistic rascal Coyle absolutely histered.
We'll get him singin',

MATHEWS (as Coyle)
And this will be my wine-cellar!
A drink, boys, to my nameless forebears, may they wrestle in peace with yours.

ASA (glass in hand)
Some sherry cobbler?

COYLE
I'll try a shot of your flintlock whiskey.
Guaranteed to kill at forty paces!

ASA (servicing him whiskey)
I warrant it'll hit the spot.
Let's have a song!

COYLE
We'll drink to This, we'll drink to That,
we'll drink to And The Other,
and after that we'll drain a glass

ASA AND LORD DUNDREARY (furtively searching Coyle's pockets)

— Chorus —

COYLE
Well we'll drink to This, we'll drink to That,

and after that we'll drain a glass

ASA and LORD DUNDREARY
Well we'll drink to This, we'll drink to That,
we'll drink to Auntie Other;
and after we purloin her keys,
we'll find out who gets licked here.

BOOTH
Look away, look away, if you can.

COYLE
We'll drink to This, we'll drink to That, ...

ASA and LORD DUNDREARY

BOOTH

MIXED AUDIENCE CHORUS (drowning each other out)

We met at the depot at dawn,
The war was kind to us;
we made a killing.
You'll light your oil lamps with kerosene.
Rend your garments,
but rend not your hearts.
But how can you emancipate
behind your back.
(*The drinking group jostles and scuffles, a bit

Laura Keene (storming backstage) Peace!

[14] Laura Keene

If you will work for Laura Keene again,
I will have peace.
What in tarnation has gotten into you?
Our President and our First Lady are coming tonight to watch us play,
and that means each of you who means to stay.
(*Ominously she surveys her cast. From the
Chief."*)
Listen, the President's anthem.
Make yourselves ready, men, to entertain.

Scene 6

Onstage

Laura Keene (comes onstage applauding and turns to the Lincolns, who take their bows and their seats)
We're awfully pleased to welcome you, Mrs. Lincoln, and you, Mr. President, here at Ford's Theater,
to our peacetime comedy,
"Our American Cousin," (exuberantly) performed by our traveling company

I think you'll recognize our story:
a certain backwoods bumpkin,
honest Asa, travels east to reunite
two severed branches of a family.
Why, he even marries Mary,
as played by me.
SOME AUDIENCE MEMBERS
Hurrah Miss Keene!
(*While Keene and the audience blow kisses to each other, Mary and Abraham Lincoln

MARY LINCOLN (furiously)
Even marries Mary!
The impudence of that coquette!

ABRAHAM LINCOLN (wearily, patiently)
Mary, Mary, keep your peace, for Willie's sake, Mother.
Remember, tonight we mean

Laura Keene (resuming) Tonight will be my final performance upon this Capitol stage.
I hope you enjoy it.
Tonight we grant you general leeway.

— Aria —

Emancipate your sorrows, losses,
for this balconied space of an hour set them free.

The North and South will pass away, forgiven and forgotten,
and rise again from a single bed with all their living and their dead united.
How long since we've fallen asleep together?
Maybe we'll never remember.
There must have been years of tossing and turning against each other.
We were trying to wake each other from the same nightmare;
till one day it dawned on us
we could be happy tending a nation,
we could be busy watching a play.
And now, Mary and Abraham Lincoln, and you, dear members of our audience,
we invite you to forget awhile, everything that's come and gone,
till your memories come back to you refreshed.
*(The audience applauds Miss Keene, who bows and exits; and they applaud the Lincolns, who

ACT II

[16] Scene 1: Father and Daughter

Drawing room, Dundreary Manor

(Mary enters, carrying her dairy account book.)

MARY (ordering)
Fourteen Jersey yearlings, fourteen cowbells,
one evaporator drum...

LORD DUNDREARY
Oh, there you are my dear.
I have something for you.
Something important, perhaps.

MARY
How marvelous, Father!
What is it?

LORD DUNDREARY (distracted, gazing off)
What is what my pet?

MARY (a bit exasperated)
This thing you have for me!

LORD DUNDREARY
I really couldn't say!

MARY
Very well, Father.
Isn't it something new?

LORD DUNDREARY
Why yes, I believe it is!

MARY
And small?

LORD DUNDREARY (pondering the clues)
Something small, something small and new.

MARY
Well then, what is it?

LORD DUNDREARY (stalling for time)
What is it? Exactly! What is it?
I think I may hazard a guess.
Is it a...?
(his hesitation becomes the start of a violent sneeze)

ah, ahhh, ahhhh...?

MARY
Bless you, Father!

LORD DUNDREARY
Botheration, Mary!
You spoiled my beautiful sneeze.
I caught the awful thing last night
in that confounded draft.
My doctor gave me something for it:
a little medicinal draught.

MARY
A draught for the cold
Why Father, you've almost enough for a game of draughts.
But we're not making any headway.

LORD DUNDREARY
That's because my head is in the way.
But let me see. Let's try a riddle!
What is it gives a cold in the head,
and cures a cold,

and pays the doctor's bill,
and makes a...?

MARY (prompting him)
and makes a ho...?

LORD DUNDREARY
and makes a who?

MARY
and makes a ho...

LORD DUNDREARY
and makes a garden hoe.

MARY
and makes a home gar...

LORD DUNDREARY (getting frustrated)
and makes a home gar...

MARY
and makes a home gar...

LORD DUNDREARY (brightening)
And takes home a garfish?

MARY (a bit less patient)
A home guard, Father!

And makes a home guard look for...
substitutes!
What gives a cold
and makes a home guard look for substitutes?

[17] I Feel a Draft

Don't you know
Mr. Lincoln suspended the draft?
(Everyone looks toward his box and applauds.)

LINCOLN (standing and clapping with the audience)

Thank you, yes thank you, thank you all.
And thank you boys! Here's to you!

I feel a draft. It cuts right through.
I can't get warm. Where's my coat?
(He fetches it from a coat rack.)

MARY LINCOLN (watching him)
He looks so frail! He can't eat.
Not while his boys lie outside.

LORD DUNDREARY (fishing around in his pockets)
Mary, I've got it,
the draft of a letter!

MARY
The draft of a letter?

LORD DUNDREARY (still fishing)
A letter from Hillynois, that's in the Reunited States.

AUDIENCE (laughter and cheers)
Hooray for the Reunited States!

LORD DUNDREARY (still fishing)
It made a hilly noise when I opened it.
That's where I got the draft in my head that made me misremember it.
(catching and pulling it out of one of his pockets)

Here it is, my dear.

MARY (taking and opening it)
Goodness, it looks like a henhouse floor!

— Aria —
(reads haltingly)

"To you,
Lord Beauregard Dundreary, and, if I may be so bold to spell,
to my dear Angly cousin, Mary,
of whom I have heard tell."
Why, the poor madman! He thinks we're related!

"I bet you never give a thought of readin' anythin' from me,
the last of themerican Dundrearies!
But. Every since I was knee-high to the cornstalks that grows
most evrywheres in Hillynois
yur Angleland and meetin' my onliest Angly kinfolks, which, my dear Beauregard

(spoken)
(reads)

"Wal, to pop the bobwhite quail
it jusso happens, there's this ainshyunt busyness

atouchin' the Dundreary clan
calls upon yurs truley
to come acrossing, where I beg you to receive,
fer no more, I magine, then a month er two,
yur longlast American cuzzin
Asa Dundreary,
railroad magnet."
Asa Dundreary!
Why, he must be the orphan
Uncle Ebenezer took in!
Papa, what does he mean by this ancient business?
(Lady Mountchessington exits.)

LORD DUNDREARY
I'm afraid I've no idea!
(aside)
and I'm afraid I do!
to Dundreary manor.
his adopted heir, this Asa,

MARY (as Keene, fiercely prompting Emerson)
Perhaps...

LORD DUNDREARY (flustered)
Perhaps...

MARY (as Keene, while the knocking continues) Perhaps that's...

LORD DUNDREARY (struggling to remember)
Perhaps that's him now, Mary.

MARY (in character, but also as Keene, glaring at Emerson)
I'll go and see.
Oh it's you, Coyle.

COYLE (enters, bows)
Solicitor at Law.

MARY
Now coiled low.
I'll leave you, Father.
(She exits.)

LORD DUNDREARY
and I'm afraid I do!
to Dundreary manor.
his adopted heir, this Asa,

COYLE (villainously)
I shall, your Lordship, oh I shall.
May I have a word with you?
(secretively) It's a delicate matter that intimately concerns us three.

LORD DUNDREARY (looking around him, confused)

Us three? Coyle,

COYLE

Shall we continue in the library?

LORD DUNDREARY

Oh very well, Coyle, follow me.

COYLE (bowing)

For the moment, milord, for the moment.

[19] Scene 2: A Moneyed Man

Drawing room, Dundreary Manor

(A near-sighted, unbespectacled Gussy enters reading, holding her novel rather close to her face. An animated Lady Mountchessington enters, and flurries across to her.)

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON

Oh Gussy, I've just received the most auspicious piece of news!
Our hosts expect a lengthy visit
eminently eligible
railroad magnet.

GUSSY (clutching her novel to her bosom)

An American Dundreary? How utterly romantic!

tracking game and bifurcating rails!

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON

Gussy, isn't that "splitting rails"?

GUSSY (with a wave of her hand)

Bifurcating, splitting . . . in any event,
there's enough to go around.

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON

I'm sure he has a heart of gold.

GUSSY (sighing)

Oh, ma, I'm so tired of admiring things I hate.
Money's so... it's so... material!

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON

Material? Why, Gussy, money's the least material

— Aria —

A moneyed man is trim.
His pockets do not bulge.
He is light-hearted.

The more he has

A moneyed man's sublime,
his holdings are immense.
There are dizzying vaults and breathtaking prospects in his speculative stare.

A moneyed man's an artist;
he inspires confidence.
He wraps you up

Nothing, in sum,
an ethereal,
a really moneyed man.
Gussy, attend our American.
Study his interests, his habits,
his disarming attempts at speech.
Remind him, dearest, of home,

GUSSY

Yes, ma.

(brightening)

I'm already fluent in American.

(waxing romantic)

Money may be material, but for surely
it isn't confining.
It sets the spirit loose
like an unbridled pig in a pasture.
America is growing like a wind, already outgrowing tomorrow.
Who better to see it,
who better to seize the potato

— Duet —

GUSSY and LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON

A moneyed man is trim.
His pockets do not bulge.

He is light-hearted.

The more he has
A moneyed man's an artist;
he inspires confidence.
until your dreams are his.
could be more romantic,
an ethereal,
a really moneyed man.

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON

Then see you turn your reading to account!

[20] Scene 3: Introductions

Drawing room, Dundreary Manor

BINNY (enters, closing the door quickly behind him)

Pahrdon me, my Lady, but there's ah houtdoorsman

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (animated)

Oh, show him in at once, Binny!

BINNY (recovering his bearing)

Ahem. Ahem!

ASA

BINNY
Cousin Ahssa

ASA That's "A-sa" with an elongated A.
Don't let yer tongue go slock.

BINNY (thoroughly discombobulated)
A-sa Dundreary of Hillynoise.
(exits)

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (proffering her hand)

May I introduce myself?
I am Lady Mountchessington, your family's most highly valued friend,
and this is my only daughter,
Augusta, heiress to the name Mountchessington, but you may call her Gussy.
Now Gussy, present Cousin Dundreary your hand.

GUSSY (extending her hand, speaking in broken American)
Oh ma, I was a-fixin' to!

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON
My daughter is devoted
American tongue.

ASA (shaking instead of kissing her hand)
Pleased to meet you!

GUSSY (curtseying)
Howdy do, I'm sure.
How dreamy and romantic your life must be, Cousin Asa, what with herding possum
by the moonlight and all, I reckon?

[21] Possum Herding

ASA (trying not to laugh)
Yes'm, possum herdin', yes'm.
I guess there's nothin'
quite like possum herdin'.
Which puts me in mind
of a story, as Mr. Lincoln says.

— Aria —

One howlin' night,
with the stars stamped asunder,
and yonder moon a-danglin' by its tail,
a-shooin' this devious herd o' possum through the Cumbersome Gap.
(illustrates in pantomime, then continues)
Now if'n you know anythin' at all
'bout the Cumbersome Gap, you know how powerful wearisome it can be.
Wal, by and by, mesmerized
and the listless swishin' o' their tails,
I commenced to dreamin'...
but no sooner had my chin
o' double-dealin' marsupials hit the ground with a thump, like wet snow off a dead branch.

Which startles me awake.
So I decides to interrogate
the possum chief: "Wal now, jist whadaya think yer doin'?"
I asks. Whereupon he whispers, confidential-like, "We're playin' possum."
"Playin' possum? Wal," I says to him,
an' I plugged him in the head.
After that command performance,
you never saw a swifter possum herd!
(Asa puts his hands on his hips and roars with laughter. Gussy looks horrified and backs away, but Lady Mountchessington blocks her retreat. She pushes Gussy back toward Asa. The three continue in pantomime, with Asa showing the Mountchessingtons how to "shoo possum.")

[22] Lincoln

AUDIENCE (in stitches) Possum herdin'!
Ah ha ha ha.
Ah ha ha ha.

LINCOLN (his laughter rising up out of the audience's)
Oh ho ho ho, oh mercy,
Oh ho ho ho, oh mercy,
oh ho ho ho, oh mercy me.
Mercy, where's my hankerchief?
Don't know when I laughed so hard.

That possum Hawk, he ain't half tall enough, but he's sure common enough for me.

— Aria —

Flatboat feet, mail-order legs, arms that dangle, like the Original Gorilla.
Honest Ape, the Missing Link,
oh yes, they like to blacken me,
make me hard to look at, difficult to see.
But I'm stuck with a pair of popcorn ears,
holler cheeks, a burrowing mole
Matt Brady couldn't chase away.
I put on hairs to hide my face away, make it less hard to look at, difficult to see.
how I'll make it through another day, but all in all, I've got a hardy constitution,
a hardy U. S. Constitution, hardy saving that peculiar institution, lodged securely there in the foundation,
taking root and growing in native soil that all these years has clouded my gray eyes.
Our founding fathers hushed those shameful words,
"slavery" and "slave," making the thing
that's so hard to look at, difficult to see.
But like any affliction, a canker or a vine,
if you don't destroy it, it spreads and overgrows, and cracks your house in two, and then
must be removed. To save the life of the nation, the branch must be cut free, free to live and let live in one nation of common-looking men and women,

SURRAT.

BOOTH.

HAROLD.

War Department, Washington, April 20, 1865,

$100,000 REWARD!

THE MURDERER

Of our late beloved President, Abraham Lincoln,

IS STILL AT LARGE.

$50,000 REWARD

[DISC 2]

[1] Scene 4: In the Library

Dundreary Manor

... and in arrears to Doctor Phlegm for fifty two pints of medicinal bitters...

LORD DUNDREARY (exasperated, breaking in)

Confound it, Coyle!

What do I pay you for if not to dispense with these infernal tradesmen?

Have you made out a total?

COYLE (opening an account book and consulting it)

Yes, milord.

It comes to four thousand eight hundred and sixty pounds, nine shillings and sixpence.

LORD DUNDREARY

Sixpence?

COYLE (shutting the account book)

Nine shillings and sixpence, four thousand eight hundred and sixty pounds.

LORD DUNDREARY

Zounds! Is there no mistake?

COYLE

I'm afraid there's no mistake.

LORD DUNDREARY

Very well, Coyle, very well. (scribbling with a quill)

We must make ends meet.

I hereby grant you power to mortgage the estate.

COYLE

Milord, I regret to say, Dundreary Manor is... entirely encumbered.

LORD DUNDREARY (shocked)

Encumbered!

COYLE

Mortgaged to my father.

LORD DUNDREARY (uncomprehending)

Your father? My father's agent?

COYLE (reverently)

Your father's industrious agent, my father, Litigius Coyle, who rescued the manor from ruin.

LORD DUNDREARY

But, is there no release?

COYLE

(His hand involuntarily grasps his breast pocket.)

No release, milord.

LORD DUNDREARY

Good Lord! What's to be done?

COYLE (delicately)

LORD DUNDREARY (impatient)
Well?

COYLE
Marry your daughter to the mortgagee.

LORD DUNDREARY (dumbfounded)
You mean... to you?

COYLE
I am prepared to clear your debts
Miss Dundreary becomes Lady Coyle.

LORD DUNDREARY (awestruck)
Lady Coyle?

COYLE (proceeding quickly)
Naturally, as her father,
that is, appurtenances, proper to
of aging patriarch.

LORD DUNDREARY (waving a fistful of papers)
You insolent scoundrel!

COYLE (bowing)
Yes, your lordship.
I'll wait just outside while you consider
my humble proposition.
hands.*)

[2] Two Letters

— Duet —

COYLE (pausing at the door, patting his breast pocket)

A letter lies in readiness,
lurking in a pocket at my breast,
a certified release,
reverse events,
restore to rightful places.
But never will it see
and never will it be called to testify.

BOOTH (in the wings)
A letter lies in readiness,
lurking in a pocket at your breast,
a certified release,
with power to undo deeds,
reverse events,
restore to rightful places,
the light of day,
whenever it shall be

COYLE and BOOTH
The slave shall play the master!

[3] Scene 5: Musical Chairs

Drawing room, Dundreary Manor

(Asa enters from outside through French doors with Lady Mountchessington and Gussy clutching either arm.)

ASA (looking around the empty room)

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (joyful)
On the contrary, they're too late!
(*Through the library door, Coyle struts in,
followed by a crestfallen Lord Dundreary.
Spotting Asa, Coyle resumes his subservient posture and drops meekly behind Lord
Mountchessingtons in tow.*)

ASA Beaugard Dundreary!

LORD DUNDREARY (scrutinizing his American garb)
Can you be Ebenezer's Asa?

ASA (extending his hand)
I reckon I can!

LORD DUNDREARY (in some confusion, clasping Asa's hand)
Welcome to Dundreary... That is to say, may I present Solicitor Coyle?

ASA (aside)
What a contwistification!

COYLE
Your servant, sir.
(bows deeply)

May I inquire,
what brings you to Dundreary Manor?

ASA (instantly sniffing out his villainy)
You may.
(*Asa turns, his back to Coyle, toward Mary, who enters in work clothes. When she sees the

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (to Asa) Poor child! Raised without a mother, all leathery and lathered from her dairy.
I don't think she knows she's a woman.

ASA (admiringly, without looking away from Mary)

LORD DUNDREARY (taking Mary's hands, introduces her, with undue emotion)
Mister Dundreary,
this is my daughter, Mary,
who knows how much I love her.

MARY (aside)
What's the matter with father?

COYLE (ravenously)
How delicious to behold my,
my client's daughter!

MARY (sidesteps Coyle and extends her hand to Asa)
Cousin Asa? What a pleasure!
What brings you to England?

ASA (enchanted)

To look at you, Miss Dundreary,
I honestly can't remember.

LORD DUNDREARY (repositioning Coyle before Mary)

Now Mary, Solicitor Coyle merits your consideration.

MARY (alarmed, aside to Lord Dundreary)

Father, what's the matter?

ASA (retaking his position)

I wonder, might I visit your dairy?

MARY (smiling indulgently)

Have you any experience in animal husbandry?

ASA

No ma'am, I have not.
I never husbanded anythin'.

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (aside to Gussy)

Gussy, don't lose him!

BINNY (entering, grandly)

Ladies and gentlemen, dinner awaits.

(The guests in line behind him, Binny leads the way into the dining room to a large table, laden with covered dishes.)

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (to Binny)

Binny, you nincompoop,

BINNY (to Lady Mountchessington)

Yes, your Ladyship.
(to Asa)

You're between these ladies.

ASA (sternly, to Binny)

I'm alongside Miss Mary.
(aside to Coyle)

You're in the wrong seat.

COYLE (to Asa)

You're in the wrong estate!

MARY (to Gussy)

Gussy, will you trade places?

GUSSY (politely, to Mary)

I'm going to be sick!

ASA

I'm gonna marry Mary!

MARY

I've got to talk to father!

COYLE

I'm going to be a Lord!

LORD DUNDREARY

I'm going to lose my daughter!

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON

I'm going to be rich!

GUSSY

I'm going to be sick!

(Binny returns with another chair and, with help, sets another place at the table.)

(Guests seat themselves; hovering staff, helped by Binny, uncovers the platters.)

GUESTS and BINNY (relieved)

Ah!

AMPUTEE IN AUDIENCE (apparently just waking up)

Will you look at all that food!

AMPUTEE (persisting)

You reckon that there's play food?

NURSE (next to him)

I think we'd best sit quietly, and watch them eat.

AMPUTEE

Like we ain't even here?

Wal, I ain't agonna sit fer that!

I'm agoin'!

AUDIENCE MEMBERS

Down in front!

Keep your seat!

ACT III

[4] Scene 1: In the Dairy

(Mary's modern dairy—engines and cowbells clanking. Twilight. Mary is showing Asa around, and overseeing her dairymaids. She's bustling; he's flagging.)

MARY

Our milk cows are Channel Island Jerseys.

Jerseys yield milk rich in butterfat.

Why they even look creamy!

(She looks around, then turns to a dairymaid.)

Elsie, don't tell me the herd's still browsing clover!

The night's at hand. Round up our capital!
(continuing)

... we heat and press our curd for cheese.

The whey we save for livestock.

Saturdays we churn butter.

ASA (feebly)

Mary, please! I'm evaporating!

MARY (concerned)

Would you like a cup of milk?

ASA (taking her hand and sitting, exasperated)

No no, Mary, not a drop.

Can't we just sit awhile?

MARY (sitting down)

Come now, Cousin Asa,

your mind's not on milk.

Suppose you tell me why you've come.

It wasn't simply for a visit,

and it surely wasn't to learn the dairy trade.

(prompting)

[5] Ancient Business

ASA (hedging)

Wal now, Mary, as to why I've come...

I'd better backtrack a bit.

Before I could cipher

my ma took milk sick

from a snake-rooted cow.

Pa never got over it, and he followed her down.

Wal now, your uncle Ebenezer, he always doted on my ma,

and he took me in.
He had no son. I had no kin.
Wal, one lowdown Febyuware
dear Ebenezer meets up with a winter ague.
He was shivery one minute and wringing wet the next.
"Asa, my boy,"
and painful slow he sez it,
"Asa, my boy,"
I kin hear him still!
"This leetle sheet a paper," he sez, tugging this parchment foolscrap from under his bearskin bedding,
"This leetle sheet..."
Mary, do you mind
if I light up a ceegar?
This story's so all-fired gloomy
I reckon I'd lose my way to the end without a light.
"When I pass," whistles Ebenezer, with a voice no loudern a dove's,
"this leetle sheet a paper will make you the present of all my Hillynoise rail estate, and all my Angly holdings, specially Dundreary Manor and Dairy, which by rights belongs to me"

MARY (standing, surprised and angry)
So, if I understand you aright,
You've come to claim possession.

ASA (anxious to calm her)
Hold on now, Mary,
the old feller ain't done fer yet!
(coaxing Mary down beside him again, and resuming his comfortable gait) Wal now, with a dreadful heave he props hisself,
"My boy," he sez, "my boy—
for you been my boy—forgive me, but I just kaint do it, I kaint.
My onliest brother, Beauregard, and his leetle daughter, Mary,
they be my rightful heirs.
The railroad's yours, my boy,
but Angly and Hillynoisy, let all the rest be theirs!"
The dairy's yers, Mary, and Dundreary's Lord of the Manor, and a rich man besides!
(hand at his breast, working up his courage)

Wal now, Mary, now that I've passed on that ancient bizness a mine,
there's somethin' worryin' my breast, MARY (thrilled with the ancient news, interrupting)
Still Lord of the Manor?
With money to clear his debts?
Oh Asa, I must find papa!

ASA (lighting Ebenezer's will with his cigar and watching it burn, pleased with himself) Wal now, I reckon that's about the richest ceegar I ever did smoke!

[6] Mary and Abraham

LINCOLN (absorbed, to himself)
Bluegray smoke and ashes...
(aloud)
Mary, I've been thinking.
We've had a hard time of it since we came out to Washington.
Now this pestilent war is over,
I'm near done for.

MARY LINCOLN
Abraham, don't say such things!

LINCOLN
Well, Mary, if saying made it so...
But anyhow I've been thinking.
After my second term,
I'd like to take up the Law again, back in Springfield maybe, or Chicago.
Maybe I'll start shaving.
Mary, what do you say?

MARY LINCOLN
I say we need a holiday!

LINCOLN (fired up)
A holiday? Say!
You know, Mary,
we've got some money put by.
Before we settle down for good,
let's jest run off to California!
What would you think about that?
(Leaning toward her, he takes her hand.)

MARY LINCOLN (delighted, glancing over her shoulder at Miss Harris and Major Rathbone) Now, Abraham, what will Miss Harris think with you hanging onto me so?

LINCOLN (also exuberant)
Why, they're in love,
they won't think anything!
Say Mary, isn't that General Burnside?
Back there, with the brushfire whiskers?

[7] Sic Semper Booth

BOOTH (manic, rehearsing outside the Presidential box)
Sic semper... sic semper...
sic semper... Booth!
Fired with drink,
bursting with flame,
catching, leaping,
spreading my name—
John Wilkes Booth forever!
I will strike boldly from the shadows
without warning from close behind—one glorious act
Sic semper Booth,
beloved assassin!
Thus William Tell
waxing his bow, thus Brutus polishing his blade, thus Booth forever

hoisting his Derringer dethrones a Pretender and erects his name.
Sic semper Booth,
the last Shakespearean.
My brother, Edwin,
Prince Hamlet of Boston, and Junius, my father,
poor Richard the Dead, will be peeling on posters
while I, John Wilkes, will still be resounding
louder forever and ever
sic semper sic semper...
Tonight I retire from the stage and enter History!

VETERAN 1 (watching Asa smoking)
Don't that ceegar smell fine!
Say friend, hows about a smoke?

VETERAN 2
Hush! That ain't for real.
He's jest pretending!

VETERAN 1
Wal, it shore smells real to me!

VETERAN 2, with OTHERS
Hush! Hush!

[8] Scene 2: Assassination
Dundreary Manor

(Lady Mountchessington and Gussy, hunting for Asa. Lady Mountchessington sets her sights on him, and alerts her daughter.)

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON
Ah, Mister Dundreary, we were just speculating on your skills as a marksman.

ASA (looking at the President's box)
Wal, I guess it's like most things:
just keep that bullion sun outta your eyes,

GUSSY
Oh Mister Dundreary,
you hit the cowseye!
Farsighted souls don't set their sights on bullion.

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (taking him cordially yet firmly by the arm, motions Gussy to his other side) Truly, my dear Asa,
we care only for your billions—
I mean your brilliance.

ASA (pausing, eyes them closely)
But... what if my sunbeams turned out to be pyrites?

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (somewhat confused, but enthusiastic) Pyrites? Why,
I suppose there's no harm in gathering a few pyrites that drop into your lap from Heaven!

ASA
Pyrites is fool's gold, ladies,
I'm penniless!
But I'm sure you both agree, that's no impediment
to affectatious souls like us.
To tell the truth, ladies,
I'm bilin' over with affectations, and I'm ready to pour 'em all over you,
like applesauce over roast pork!
(turning to Gussy, unsure how to react)

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (horrified, retrieves her daughter) Augusta, to your room!

GUSSY
But ma, maybe I am affectatious like he says.
(runs off weeping)

LADY MOUNTCHESSINGTON (sternly)
Mister Dundreary,
it is becoming increasingly clear that you are woefully illiterate in the manners of Christian society.
(parades off)

ASA (exultant)
Wal now, Lady Treasure-chest
I guess I found your hymnal page, you sock-dologizing ole man-trap!

AUDIENCE MEMBER 1
Ho ho, sock-dologizing!
I don't get it.
(A dull sound and smoke issue from the President's box.)

BOOTH (lowering himself carefully onstage, catches his foot on the U.S. flag; landing awkwardly, curses aside) Damned flag spoiled my leap!
(limping to center stage, he strikes a heroic pose, swaying, dagger aloft)
Sic semper tyrannis!

AUDIENCE MEMBER 2
Seek who? Look sharp, Asa!

AUDIENCE MEMBER 1
What's so blamed funny?

AUDIENCE MEMBER 3 to MEMBER 4 Say, that's John Wilkes Booth!
Who's he supposed to be?

ASA (alone onstage behind Booth, ad libbing) Wal now, I, uh, I, reckon that's...
(Hearing him, Booth whirls around, nearly collapsing.)

ASA (recognizing him, blurts in disbelief) John!?
(Booth slashes at him menacingly. Hawk first stares, then turns tail and runs offstage right, followed by Booth. The stage is empty. The audience is silent. The theater orchestra strikes up a faltering patriotic tune. The opera audience lights come on.)

AUDIENCE MEMBER 1 (finally standing up)
Say, what's goin' on here?
(More scattered laughter, applause)

AUDIENCE MEMBERS 3 and 4 (convulsing with laughter)
Hoho hoho!

AUDIENCE MEMBER 3
Down in front!

AUDIENCE MEMBER 4
It's just a gag!

LAURA KEENE (striding onstage, arms aloft)
Ladies and gentlemen...
(Audience disquiet builds.)

EMERSON (rushing onstage, aside)
Miss Keene, you're losing me!
(in character of Dundreary)
Now look what you've done, my pet, you've spoiled my magnificent sneeze!

MISS HARRIS
Miss Keene, bring water!

LAURA KEENE
What's happening? What happened?

EMERSON (as Dundreary, persisting, oblivious)
Ah ahhh ahhhhhh...

MISS HARRIS
It's the President!
He's been shot!
(Gasps and groans from the audience. Dundreary stops suddenly mid-sneeze, deflates, and exits bewildered.)

LAURA KEENE (turns back to the crowd, resolutely) Ladies, gentlemen,
please keep your seats!
All will be well, I assure you, (faltering)
All will be...

— Audience Chorus —

AUDIENCE A

AUDIENCE J
Ahhh! Shoot! Shoot! Ahhh shoot!

WOMAN
Mercy oh mercy! Mercy!

Merciful Jesus!

AUDIENCE J

AUDIENCES J and M
Mercy, oh mercy!

[9] Scene 3: The Presidential Box

MARY LINCOLN (kneels over Lincoln)
And am I to give him?
And now, my God am I,
to give my husband?
What will become,
Miss Harris, I say,
What will Miss,
Harris think of me—remember, darling?
What, will Miss Harris?
—all the while we're holding on, to each other, by our hands—
anything about it, and am I,

I ask, to give him up,
this awful, this awful place—?

AUDIENCE

Clear the way!

Make way for the doctor!

He's an Army surgeon.

Let him pass.

DOCTOR LEALE (forcing his way, in civilian clothes, kneels beside Lincoln, addressing Mary Lincoln)

Missus Lincoln,

I'm Doctor Leale.

MARY LINCOLN (lapsing back into her chair, but without acknowledging him)

If only, I hadn't brought him

I am in need,

black straw,

a black velvet headdress,

twisted as you did the crimson,

heartsease before and behind,

DOCTOR LEALE (kneeling before the rocker, checking Lincoln's wrist for a pulse, and listening to his chest)

some breathing, labored breathing.

MARY LINCOLN (continuing without pause or response)

I implore you, exercise your taste,

a purple silk velvet headdress of the exact shade, of the flowers,

without they are of the best,

I will require ruche flutings of Mechlin lace,

the very finest and blackest and lightest,

a shimmering black silk mesh—

is so beautiful, the wonder is,

we cannot feel well—

DOCTOR LEALE (turning to those in the Statebox)

Men, help me lay him out,

MARY LINCOLN

I await your reply, darling, have I mentioned,

our Willie, lives, he,

comes to me every night he,

hovers at the foot of my bed,

he will know you, now,

and we will feast ourselves on communion,

draped in light black silk,

the thin veil back

AUDIENCE

It's Mary! Laura Keene!

Clear the way for Miss Keene!

DOCTOR LEALE (to the crowd)

Who's got a pocket knife?

(An audience member hands him a knife.)

LAURA KEENE (ushered in, carrying a pitcher of water)

Doctor, here's some water.

May I hold his head?

DOCTOR LEALE (to her, abstracted)

What? Very well.

Wash his temples.

LAURA KEENE (kneeling down, cradling his head in her lap)

Jesus, pour down your pity!

(begins to wash him)

MARY LINCOLN (crossing over, stands over her)

It's Mary, isn't it?

And even marries Mary,

instead of me?

DOCTOR LEALE (threading the fingers of both hands slowly back through Lincoln's hair)

I've found a head wound!

LAURA KEENE (shaken, looking up)

I'm Laura Keene.

You have mistaken me.

MARY LINCOLN (triumphant)

Oh I don't believe so,

I know you,

I should have known, you

in this awful place,

DOCTOR LEALE (regaining his presence of mind)

The passageway's clear, smooth and clear.

I can pass my little finger through.

I have his pulse.

The blood must not congeal.

LAURA KEENE

Will he live?

DOCTOR LEALE (looking off, struggling for self-control)

His wound is mortal.

It's just impossible—

It is impossible for him to recover.

MARY LINCOLN
Where's my veil!
I will not leave this box
without my veil.

DOCTOR LEALE
He must be moved.
He's not safe in this place.
Break off that door for a cot.
We'll take him to Petersen House.
And keep these women away!

LAURA KEENE (rising, aghast)
My God, I'm drenched in his blood!

[10] Scene 4: Hawk's Second Chance
The stage; the house

(Audience members quiet and comfort each other. Soldiers are seen questioning them, and looking for evidence. Hawk wanders backstage in a daze.)

HAWK
My chance has come and gone—
I stood alone, in character.
There was a burst of laughter,
a puff of smoke.
A villain entered off cue.
"Stop him!" they shouted, like it was real.
He held a knife, but he was reeling.
I might've knocked him down,
I had a chance of thwarting him,
my second chance to redeem myself.

What have I done, Mark?
I meant to take your part.
Now I am condemned to play myself,
a heroic buckskin
who stares down the footlights,

[11] Burning Letter

MATHEWS ( pacing backstage, unseen by Hawk, agitated)
What's happening here? What happened?
Wasn't that Booth, in the President's box?
Who called for a shot, and a dagger?
Was the President part of the gag?
Was the President—?
The house went mad—
No, I won't believe it!
Somebody put on a play.
And did I... take a part?
What was it Booth handed me?
What did I take from his hands?

— Duet —

MATHEWS and BOOTH
"To my Countrymen, who have outlived their Country—
Our Nation was founded for the white man,

But that tyrant Emancipator, who devours the young...
Something decisive and great must be performed...
but I am bound, too like MacBeth, to the crosssties of my Destiny.
Signed..."

MATHEWS (crushing the letter in his hands)
Liar, reciter, pretender, imposter, hashish eater,... actor!
because you'd mouthed the lines of
The crowds were awestruck, and you believed them!
And who am I? Your breathless messenger?
I should have known! I knew you!
Take care, Jack!
They're looking for actors out there.
If they find you with this,
Get rid of it, drop it, burn it!

HAWK
Say Jack, what's that you're spiriting away?

MATHEWS
A letter. It's... private.

HAWK
Anybody dead inside it?

MATHEWS
Inside, and at the borders.

HAWK
The damning document?
The villain's tragic oversight?
Then it's a property of the stage.
You're still in costume.
Let it burn away forever.
Act like nothing ever happened,

MATHEWS
Let it burn?

HAWK
Away forever.

MATHEWS
Like it never happened?

HAWK
Nothing ever does.
A drink to the lot of us!

MATHEWS (hesitating, then drinking)
(Two soldiers appear. One pokes the ashes, the other confiscates the flask. The two pairs eye each other suspiciously.)

SOLDIERS

You're actors, ain't you?
We'll have a word with you.
We'd like to question you
as to your whereabouts, and your associations.
We've got our orders.
We don't want no trouble.
Come along.

— Duet —

MATHEWS and HAWK
You've got the wrong man!
We didn't do it!
We acted like always,
like nothing ever happens.
Remand us to our custody.
You won't regret it.
We'll never get away.
We may not be red-handed,
but we're guilty—we know it—of something,
of everything we did not do.

SOLDIERS (long-suffering)
OK boys, OK now.
Thanks fer the little show,
but it's time to come along.

[12] Scene 5: Blood Stains

On the stage, Laura Keene

(Distractedly, Laura Keene enters backstage)

— Aria —

Quick, somebody, quick, before it soaks, before it spreads!
It's oozed out on my moiré silk,
It's in my hair, and on my hands.
I open Monday in Cincinnati.
I've got to scrub it, flush it out.
It's in my nose, and in my eyes.
Somebody quick get me a cake
Everything I touch is splotched.
(succeeding with effort in recollecting herself)
the playwrights, plays, and playbills,
But I couldn't keep the bloodshed out;
I couldn't keep the war from breaking in.
Should I have lowered and hushed our curtains,

Was I wrong, all these years,
Was I wrong to believe
(As the aria subsides, a shadowy figure appears behind Laura Keene.)

[13] Apparition

LINCOLN (interrupting her) Pardon me, Miss Keene.

LAURA KEENE (startled, frightened)
Who is it? Who are you?

LINCOLN
I hate to disturb you.
I was wondering,
when will the play
I wouldn't ask,
but I'm kind of tired.
I feel awful short-winded
for a tall man.
Isn't it near through?

LAURA KEENE (suspecting who it is)
The play is over,
for tonight at least.
Something horrible happened.
Somebody shot somebody.

LINCOLN
That's terrible.
It always is.
I never owned a gun.
So there's no concert?

No "Honor to our Soldiers"?

LAURA KEENE
I'm afraid, Mister, the orchestra's disbanded.

LINCOLN

I can't carry a tune two
but I love to hear them that can.
My jaw-bones ached today
Old Dundreary,
He acts just like
he's fighting bees.
(He laughs.)
My favorite play of all's Macbeth.
I think it's wonderful.
"Duncan is in his grave.
has done his worst.
malice domestic,
foreign levy, nothing, can touch him further."
That's about it, I think.

LAURA KEENE
That's the way I remember it.
(pauses)
Oh Mister President,
don't you really know what happened?

[14] Final Chorus

AUDIENCE

Funny, how hard it is to remember,
what shreds and ravelings might someday save us.
There was a passing blur,
a churning, a blotch.
until every drop drawn with a lash shall be paid with another drawn with a gun.
For Hispañola, Jamestown, Charleston,
Harper's Ferry for Manassas, Shiloh, Malvern Hill, Antietam, Marye's Heights, Chancellorsville,
for Gettysburg, for Little Round Top, Fort Wagner, for Chickamauga,

Chattanooga, Spotsylvania, Libbey Prison for Atlanta,
Petersburg for Appomatox,
Ford's Theater for blood for blood...
E pluribus pluribus pluribus—
already it runs together.
